

America's Plutocracy and the Need for Reform

America's political system is presidential, not parliamentary, as are most democracies in the world. It is not modern. Scandinavian politicians for example do not have to worry about raising money for reelection at all, because their form of democracy is differently structured. But America's is so old and so badly conceived that it needs a ton of money to pay for the TV ads to get politicians reelected. This abuse has become so bad today that US politicians are now stooges/puppets to corporations and lobby groups like AIPAC (the Jewish lobby in the US). America is no longer a democracy but rather a plutocracy (rule of the rich). US politicians do what their donors want of them, i.e. what the corporations and the Jewish government wants, including going to war with Iraq and Iran. The solution to America's lack of democracy is deep reform, by throwing out their presidential system and replacing it with a parliamentary system, so that the need for reelection donations from corporations and lobby groups become structurally irrelevant. Then US democracy can become as it should be - "for the people, by the people."
