Abstract

One of the major aims of Globa is to remove world poverty, and one of the most effective means of doing that is to educate the people of the world for free using cheap effective technology, e.g. dirt cheap smart phones that can receive the internet, either by cable, radio, or satellite. This sounds fine in theory, but there is one major drawback in this plan, and that is the differing average IQ levels of the peoples of the earth. This essay suggests ideas on how this problem might be addressed.

One of the main reasons why third world countries are third world, i.e. poor and poorly educated is their lower average intelligence. This is true of countries such as India, the Arab countries, the native Americans, and the middle eastern countries, all of whom have an average IQ of only 85. These peoples are of the same intelligence level as the blacks in the US, who actually have had their average IQ raised by sexual mingling with white slave owners who had an average IQ of 100, pulling the black (grey) average up from 70, to the mid way figure of 85. In Africa, there are a billion blacks with an average IQ of only 70, which would be borderline mentally retarded by white and yellow standards.

The one big exception to the correlation between low national average IQ scores and thirdworldness is China, which is actually one of the smartest big groups of the world, with an average IQ of 105, which is as smart as Germans, who together with the Dutch have the highest average IQ in western Europe. The reason for Chinese poverty despite its high intelligence is a topic for debate, and a bit of a side issue to the main theme of this essay, but interesting nevertheless.
