

Spare Me From Isscienate Female Journalists

Prof. Dr. Hugo de GARIS
profhugodegaris@yahoo.com

Abstract

In the developed countries, journalism is dominated by women, at least in terms of the number of journalists. Women like words, they speak 25000 of them per day on average, compared to men's 15,000. Women also tend not to be very interested in technical engineering matters, nor in political philosophy, anywhere near as much as men. That means that the male intellectuals (sages) who dominate the "species dominance debate" have a hard time trying to talk to isscienate female journalists. Personally, when I'm approaching the media, I try to avoid such females and prefer if possible to talk with a male, who likes politics, who is scienate, and can see readily what I'm trying to get at, and even better, finds it fascinating.

1. Introduction

ZZ